I paid the State House a visit on yesterday, It being the organization day of the Logislature. I went through the entire building, and think it by far the handsomest and most tasty building I have ever seen. It is not quite finished in some of the upper stories. Its cost is between one and two millions. The museum is the most interesting apartment, though it is just begun. I amount of regret has been made for the loss of he art of preserving the dead body when I gone, it could not be distinguished from prothe d-l, if his Satanic Majesty had no more than not only useless, but horridly disgusting. There is one matter connected with it, though, that was singular to me, that it was wrapped in what would appear to a superficial observer to be correctoreds, which I rake to be an evidence that the Favortians readed with Massachuseur. I have been put in possession of some very tartling facts to-day, which, taken in connection with others already well known, furnish as strong attitude of France and England toward the Inited States. You are aware that Sir James orguson, a distinguished member of the British Carliament, is now in this city, having come from Richmond through the lines of the opposing armies before Washington, under the protection of a flag of truce. It is proper to state here that I have derived none of my information from Sir James, or from the gentleman who accompanies him. Indeed, it is due to him to say that he has ing the privileges of a flag of truce as too sacred

The facts then are these: The "open letters of introduction" which Sir James bore, were from a higher source than Dudley Mann. They were from Lord Palmerston, and, whether addressed found many curiosities; among them an Egyptian munmy, supposed to be about thirty-five hundred years old. I was astonished at what an analysis of the supposed to be about thirty-five from Lord Paimerston, and, whether addressed to Jeff.
